Having previously been an enthusiastic supporter of the pharmaceutical industry’s experimental COVID-19 vaccines, there is widespread speculation that Boris Johnson is planning still further restrictive UK lockdowns for later this year. He hinted at this only a few days after his statement about lockdowns when he warned that yet another coronavirus wave is now expected.

In defending lockdowns and other draconian responses to the pandemic, Boris Johnson and other politicians are frequently heard claiming there is no alternative. Such claims are demonstrably false, however. Research carried out by scientists at the Dr. Rath Research Institute has proven that specific combinations of micronutrients are capable of blocking the interaction between the binding site of the coronavirus ‘spike’ and its entry point into human cells – the angiotensin-converting enzyme 2 (ACE2). The interaction targeted in this research is the first step in coronavirus infection and precisely the same biological mechanism focused on by COVID-19 vaccines. As a result, it is already now possible for responsible governments to protect the health of their citizens naturally, strengthen immunity against the virus, and save lives.
